To Whom It May Concern,

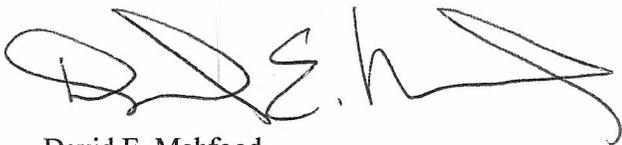

It brings me great joy to be able to provide this letter on behalf of Allstar Restoration. Our church was completely devastated by arsonists on January 16, 2010. Allstar, through our local Baptist association, requested to meet with us a day or two later. Though the smoke had literally not cleared from the remains of our building, we took the meeting. A few hours later, we agreed to hire Allstar as our general contractor. This was not a decision we entered into lightly, nor hurriedly. A number of factors played into our decision which you may find applicable to the situation in which you may now find yourself.

First, Allstar brought an impressive list of references to the table. After speaking to numerous pastors and administrators of the churches on the list, I came away confident that these were the men for the job. I received testimony after testimony about how Allstar went "above and beyond" the agreement, and how – while they clearly are in the business of remodeling and construction – they never forgot that they were working on the House of God. They're professionalism and sensitivity were always present in abundance, said their references. This has held true every step of the way in our case, as well.

Second, Allstar represents a vast informational resource which goes beyond the scope of simple construction matters. In the early going, we were quite confused and overwhelmed by the insurance process. Allstar's management team has years of experience in dealing with the adjustment and settlement phases of insurance claims. They promised to serve as our advocate – which they did – but they were our "security blanket" as well, guiding us through the red tape and regulations. I have no doubt that without their help; we would have lost considerable moneys for our own lack of knowledge.

Finally and most importantly, when I and my deacons sat with Allstar for the first time, we sensed an incredibly strong leading of the Spirit. In a case of "you can't understand unless you understand," sitting across the table from Corky and Jeremy felt correct. To the man, we each felt a peace about them and an assurance that these were indeed the men God had sent to see us through this tragedy in our church's life. Conventional wisdom dictates that in a "total loss" situation like ours, you should wait until the insurance pays, and begin the process of selecting the best bid. Had we waited, the completion of our new building would have been delayed by months and I have no doubt that we would be enjoying the results we are enjoying now.

We dedicate our new building on June 26, 2011 – and it is more beautiful than anything we could have ever imagined. I urge you to strongly consider Allstar for your needs. It was simply the best decision we could have made, and our congregation is certain that God has blessed us for following His leading.
