

“A Friend of Outcasts”

Jesus ministered to several types of outcasts. One of these groups was the lepers. In Bible times, leprosy was not quite the same as modern-day leprosy. Biblical leprosy referred to a wide range of skin disorders including: eczema, psoriasis, ringworm, boils, and other open sores. These conditions were thought to be infectious. According to the Law of Moses, if you were diagnosed with one of these skin conditions, you had to leave your home and your family and move outside of town until the condition got better. You were to keep distance from others so you did not spread the condition to them and if anyone came near, you had to shout out, “Unclean!” Lepers were forced to live outside of town in a colony until they were declared clean by a priest, something that might never happen. For all the fear someone with leprosy would bring upon others, Jesus was never afraid. He welcomed lepers and even touched them (Luke 5:12-13).

A second type of outcast in the days of Jesus was people considered unclean for other reasons. For example, they may have been of the wrong religion or a foreigner. One of the largest groups that met these criteria was the Samaritans. They were so despised, that Jews would travel many miles to bypass this region when travelling between Judea and Galilee. The hatred stemmed from eight centuries of conflict. It began during the Assyrian conquest of Israel. The ten northern tribes were decimated. Many were killed; others were led into captivity, while some were left behind who intermarried with other nationalities that the Assyrians brought in to settle the land (2 Kings 17). The offspring of this group were called Samaritans. The Jews considered the Samaritans half-breeds, even though they adopted many beliefs and traditions of the Jewish faith. They were not allowed to worship in the Temple at Jerusalem, so they built their own temple on Mount Gerizim in Samaria. The Jews viewed the Samaritans as unclean, but Jesus did not. One time Jesus was heading from Judea to Galilee (John 4:1-42) and we are told he “had to go through Samaria.” Actually, no one “had to go” through Samaria. Jews frequently went out of their way to avoid Samaria. But Jesus “had to go” through Samaria because he cared about the Samaritans and this woman. Jesus arrived to the town of Sychar at midday. He sent his disciples into town to buy food and waited outside, sitting near the town’s water source. It was and still is called Jacob’s well.

Women typically got water in the morning when it was cooler, but this woman shows up at midday. She was likely considered an outcast by the people of her own village. We are told that she had been married and divorced (or her husbands all died) five times, and she was currently living with someone who was not her husband. When they meet, Jesus asks her for a drink. Here is Jesus seeking out a woman who was considered an outcast even among the outcast Samaritans. She is a double outcast, but Jesus offers her life. Jesus gives her something that will fill her up. This amazing story ends with the woman returning to town and telling others that she had met the Messiah. Here we find a woman who lived a tragic life becoming the first missionary to the Samaritans. Followers of Jesus befriend outcasts. This is the way Jesus lived and the way we get to live.
