

“The Nature of Work”

“So I saw that there is nothing better for a man than to enjoy his work.” (Ecclesiastes 3:22). Work: something we take pride in, something we love, something we hate, something that gives us our identity. When we meet a stranger, one of the first questions we ask is “So what do you do?” Work gives us status and self-worth. Depending on the day, work is something we take pride in or we hate. So is work a curse or a blessing? The answer of Ecclesiastes is both.

Remember that the writer of this book is wealthy. He has the luxury of picking any job he wants. He is able to experiment. In searching for the meaning of life, he examines work. As the king, he rebuilds the entire country with orchards and beautiful plants and flowers. His gardens are exquisite. He makes a lot of money through his labors but it seems to lead him nowhere. Work is a curse (Ecclesiastes 2:17-23).

The writer uses the word “toil” to describe work. This is not a pleasant description. Is all work really toil? I can understand ditch digging, coal mining, or tobacco picking – that is toil, but what about playing professional baseball, flying airplanes, being a movie star, or being a full-time preacher? Those jobs are nothing but fun. No, the writer calls all work toil. Remember that Solomon probably didn’t have to work a day of his life as far as manual labor goes. Others did it for him. But he still considers his work meaningless toil. Why? Because work produces nothing of lasting value. How long will our great accomplishments last? Not long – work long hours building the business, then you die and then what? All that you worked for may very well go down the drain, be sold off, and all forgotten.

So can there be joy in work? Yes there can, but we must have the right perspective about work. Work is toil if we are relying on it for our self-esteem and identity. Work is toil if we expect our accomplishments to last. While work is toil, it can also bring joy. “So I saw that there is nothing better for a man than to enjoy his work, because that is his lot. For who can bring him to see what will happen after him? (Ecclesiastes 3:22). If we work to accomplish something great, we will be disappointed at some point. But if we leave the future of our work to God, then we don’t have to worry about our work.

So what does work mean for us today? Perhaps we should work less if we take it too seriously. We need to let God, not our work, rule our lives. We are also reminded that our job should not be our life. Our value comes from God because he loves us, not because of what we accomplish at work. We also need to find joy in our work, in the task at hand which means doing something you like. If you hate your job, it might be time to look for another – don’t quit until you find something else. And lastly, the value of our work lies in God’s hands.

“Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord, not for human masters, since you know that you will receive an inheritance from the Lord as a reward. It is the Lord Christ you are serving” (Colossians 3:23-24). What work could seem more like toil than that of a slave? As we slave away at our work, let’s do so with joy knowing that we work, not for a boss or for money, but ultimately for the Lord.
