

Yankee Pitcher Tommy John

Had a bad day lately? Yankee Pitcher Tommy John had an unusually bad one back in 1988. He earned the almost unbelievable distinction of committing three errors on one play.

First he bobbled a slow roller back to the mound.

Then he overthrew the ball past the first baseman in the right field. Then the runner who had been on second base broke for home, and John took the cutoff throw back in from right field.

His throw to the plate to stop the run also went wild. The runner scored and Tommy John had his three errors on one play. The good news is that the Yankees still won 16 to 3, and John had only one more error all season long. Just goes to show that a bad day doesn't make a bad year. Thank God for that!
