

The Lone Ranger

In 1941, millions of American youngsters listened with bated breath for the recovery of radio hero, The Lone Ranger. Seriously wounded by desperados, the masked man was unable to speak for several broadcasts while faithful Indian companion Tonto administered recovery. What kids didn't know was that in real life, 32-year-old actor Earl Grazer, who played the Lone Ranger, had been killed in an automobile accident. After several weeks, a suitable replacement was found, and kids all over American were once again following their hero as he covered the Old West astride his famous horse, Silver.

Life often deals difficult blows—and situations aren't as easily resolved as simply finding another masked man. Some losses seem irreversible, but God promises help in even the most extreme situations.
