

New York, New York

My parents wanted me to experience the World's Fair in 1965, and it was the trip of a lifetime! I was amazed by how the city functioned. How did all those people get around; and eat, and sleep and breathe?

I've been back to New York City a few times since then, and I still live in absolute awe of the Big Apple. What I didn't know until my adult years is that the city can function not because of what you see above ground, but because of the tremendous infrastructure below ground. I have learned that the city is great because it goes deeper than it goes higher. New York is like an iceberg—only a small part of it is visible above the surface.

Great lives are like that too. Jesus said a great life is so because a strong foundation exists on the inside. What about you? Are you just building high, or are you building deep too?
