FRONTLINE follows renowned writer and surgeon, Atul Gawande, as he explores the relationships between doctors and patients who are nearing the end of life. Along with Gawande's book, Being Mortal, the film challenges us to reexamine how we think about death and dying. The film investigates the practice of caring for the dying, reports on the burgeoning field of palliative care and explores ways patients can live their lives fully, all the way to the very end.

A discussion immediately following the film will include perspectives from medical, ethical, legal and long-term care professionals.
