From the late 1990s, The Sentinel Group has tracked and investigated several hundred transformed communities in settings ranging from tribal villages to urban metropolises. Many of these stories are now well known, having been made accessible through the ministry’s documentaries and tour program.

The Sentinel Group has not confined itself to storytelling, however. We have also spent considerable time analyzing these transformational breakthroughs in an effort to identify underlying patterns and principles. Now, after more than a decade of study, we are ready to share our findings with communities that long to experience transforming revival for themselves.

What is The Journey to Transformation?

The Journey to Transformation (JTT) is a process that is designed to prepare a community for divine visitation and subsequent societal transformation — a condition otherwise known as spiritual awakening.

The process itself can last anywhere from three months to a year — depending upon a community’s readiness to free itself from competing distractions. This time is spent understanding God’s expectations, counting the cost to proceed, building individual and corporate faith, confessing and repenting of known sin, and prevailing with God in prayer.

A centerpiece of the Journey to Transformation process is the Torchlight School, a multi-phase training regimen that includes a weekend Beginner’s Course, a 12-week Community Course, and a post-visitation Maintenance Course. Many faculty members are drawn from previously transformed communities and are therefore able to augment their teaching with firsthand experiences.

The Journey to Transformation training is currently available through The Sentinel Group and other members of the North American Fellowship of Transformation Partners (NAFTAP). Areas outside of North America will be able to access the training in mid 2012 through certified affiliates of the International Fellowship of Transformation Partners (IFTP).
Who Should Take This Journey?

They grieve over the condition of their community, but can’t seem to find the pathway to genuine change. They suspect that God is concerned about their plight, but are conflicted over his apparent reluctance to intervene. They do what they can in his absence, but it never seems to be enough.

Happily, the JTT process offers a powerful solution to people who are desperate for genuine results. Employing a combination of biblical teaching, inspiring examples, and clear action steps, it rebuilds godly expectancy that leads to health and wholeness.

Having spent more than a decade examining hundreds of transformation success stories, we are convinced that proper preparation — which begins with counting the cost of such a venture — is essential. While it is sometimes true that a journey is its own reward, in the matter of transforming revival, success is all about reaching our intended destination.

How Do We Start?

The weekend Beginner’s Course is the first step on the road to transformation. Open to all comers, it begins by establishing the need for transforming revival, moves on to define what success looks like, and ends with a thorough discussion of both the process and cost of preparing for a divine visitation.

In short, the Beginner’s Course sets forth the core considerations that a community must reflect on before committing to pursue the Journey to Transformation. Those who count the cost and elect to continue move on to a 12-week Community Course that amplifies transformational principles and provides extended time for personal and corporate application.
