High Risk Pregnancy

What is High Risk Pregnancy?

A pregnancy is considered high risk when there are potential complications or conditions that could affect the mother, the unborn baby, or both. Medical conditions like: high-blood pressure, diabetes, lupus and other immune conditions, heart or lung problems, or chronic infections can lead to a high risk pregnancy. A history of multiple miscarriages, preterm labor, preeclampsia, and or genetic disorders could be included.

We are dedicated to you and your pregnancy.

The patient is initially referred to Maternal-Fetal Medicine Specialists of South Florida for consultation by their primary obstetrician, midwife, or nurse practitioner. We work closely with your provider to try to achieve the best possible pregnancy outcomes. If necessary, we may refer you to other specialists that will help with your treatment. We are dedicated to providing comprehensive and compassionate care in a warm and friendly environment. We believe in providing the highest quality medical care, communication, and support.