

Tomorrow's People Today

Bryn Jones

Why some people who think that they are tomorrow's people today, are not.

- They have vision, but it is only second hand
- They fear anything that could expose them to failure
- They are Controllers rather than Fathers
- They are owners of the vision instead of servants of the vision.
- They look for glory, recognition and status
- They are locked up by the people instead of leading the people in liberty
- They are perfectionists rather than purpose motivated
- They spend time trying to perfect the present rather than pressing forward to the future.
- They use people instead of making them useful
- They are threatened by people with gift and purpose because they fear they will lose their position
- They seek to submerge people rather than seeking that people emerge
- Always seeking to highlight weaknesses in men, but never learning from their own mistakes because they never own up to them
- They talk of tomorrow but live for today
- Instead of vision taking them on a journey, ego takes them on a downward spiral
- They are figureheads and not fathers
- They confuse performance with purpose
