Preface

Did the new millennium begin January 1, 2000 or 2001? Was the 29th Annual Meeting in March 2000 the right time to celebrate the Society's thirtieth year, or is the 30th Meeting in March 2001 a better one?

The two questions have a lot in common. Both deal with deciding which accounting of time deserves the greater attention: the more strictly correct calculation or the occasion that captures the greater public attention? And it appears that both receive the same answer: The millennium was celebrated grandly one year early, strictly; and the Society is, with this volume, celebrating a 30th at its 30th Annual Meeting, not strictly during its 30th year of operation (which ended November 6, 2000). But just as we scholars enjoy pointing out how ways of marking the years are relative and derailed by historical changes both wrenching and mild, we point out that the transition from meeting in the fall to the spring caused the Society not to meet in 1995 and allows us to celebrate our 30th Annual Meeting in 2001.

This messiness is just the sort that keeps historians employed and harmony-happy biblical scholars annoyed. Maybe too it's the kind of messiness that can help us obsessive-compulsive types yield to compromises of grace that allow us to enjoy gifts of God that we cannot reckon with the degree of precision upon which we may think our careers (or salvation?) hang.

We hope you will join us in enjoying the cornucopia of blessing that the Society is: blessings of service through scholarship and teaching, a rich vocation; and blessings of interconfessional friendship, with a constancy of now more than 30 years—without hint of a societal divorce. Enjoy this volume's brief retrospective (beginning with the Society's founding in 1970, before the 1st Meeting), and give thanks to God. Browse through the 260 directory entries, perhaps discovering another member who shares your interests, and again, give thanks to God.

However you prefer reckoning it, enjoy our blessed 30th!

The Pentecostal 20th Century

by Vinson Synan

On the first day of the 20th century—January 1, 1901—a young woman named Agnes Ozman was baptized in the Holy Spirit at a small Bible school in Topeka, Kansas. A Bible student of former Methodist pastor and Holiness teacher Charles Fox Parham, Ozman received a glorious manifestation of the gift of tongues and became, in effect, the first Pentecostal of the 20th century.

“I laid my hand upon her and prayed,” Parham later recalled. “I had scarcely completed three dozen sentences when a glory fell upon her, a halo seemed to surround her head and face, and she began speaking the Chinese language and was unable to speak English for three days.”

It was not until 1906, however, that Pentecostalism achieved worldwide attention. In that year, the Azusa Street Revival in Los Angeles began, led by pastor William Joseph Seymour. Seymour first learned about the baptism in the Holy Spirit with tongues in 1905 at a Bible school Parham held in Houston. In the early spring of 1906, he accepted a call to pastor a black Holiness church in Los Angeles. He began the historic Azusa meetings in April.

What happened because of the Azusa Street Revival has fascinated church historians for decades and has yet to be fully understood and explained. The Azusa Street Apostolic Faith Mission conducted three services a day, seven days a week, for 3-1/2 years. Thousands of seekers received the baptism in the Holy Spirit with tongues. The Apostolic Faith, a newspaper Seymour sent free of charge to some 50,000 subscribers, spread word of the revival. From Azusa Street, Pentecostalism spread rapidly around the world and started to become a major force in Christendom.

As the rest of the world celebrated the arrival of a new century, few people could have imagined that these humble events would trigger the worldwide Pentecostal-charismatic movement and bring one of the mightiest revivals and missionary movements in the history of the church. Since then, the worldwide Pentecostal movement has become the largest and most important Christian movement of this century. Beginning with only a handful of people in 1901, the number of Pentecostals has increased steadily throughout the world.

By the time the 20th century drew to a close, Pentecostals were—and are—the largest family of Protestants in the world. With more than 200 million members designated as “denominational Pentecostals,” this group has surpassed the Orthodox churches to become the second largest denominational family of Christians in the world, second only to Roman Catholic. In addition to these “classical denominational Pentecostals,” millions of charismatics worship in the mainline denominations and nondenominational churches, both Roman Catholic and Protestant. The combined number of both now stands at more than 500 million people. This growth has caused some historians to refer to the 20th century as the “Pentecostal Century.” •

The Dawning of the Pentecostal Mind

by Russell P. Spittler

Near the end of the twentieth century, a leading philanthropic foundation funded a project to digitize fifty leading journals in religion and theology for a project sponsored by the American Theological Library Association. Among the titles chosen by a consulting group of scholars was Pneuma: The Journal of the Society for Pentecostal Studies. You could call that a benchmark.

The inclusion of Pneuma with the initial group of digitized journals flags the guild assessment of the academic usefulness of the periodical itself. But it also attests to the emergence, especially over the second half of the twentieth century, of Pentecostal scholarship.

If evangelicals battled a reputation for anti-intellectualism, Pentecostals a lot more so. "When you preach to Pentecostals," one of my patriarchal mentors advised (himself president of a Pentecostal college), "you have to throw away your brains." Things have changed. The ecclesial tradition that loathed liturgy and functioned orally and spontaneously, that still more easily speaks of "Bible doctrine" than of "systematic theology," now features graduate theological seminaries along with colleges that began life as unaccredited Bible institutes but since have joined the recent evangelical tide toward self-designation as "universities." Increasingly, their presidents hold university doctorates.

Pentecostal scholars now appear on the mastheads of leading evangelical publications. They show up in conclaves of scholars. They are found not merely in North America but in Asia, Latin America, Africa, Australia, and Europe. Some of the finest of them, and this is a telling fact, constitute a sort of Pentecostal academic diaspora: Not welcome in the native Pentecostal schools, they have found homes in evangelical institutions of note as well as in a few major universities. The cadre of Pentecostal scholars, it seems likely, does not even know its own strength. While a few Pentecostal Ph.D.'s serve in leading pastorates, it is right to say that in the black Pentecostal tradition, unlike their white counterparts, well trained academics are far more likely to be found among elected regional and national church leadership.

We are witnessing the emergence of the Pentecostal mind. Perhaps more than any single force in that development has been the impact of the Society for Pentecostal Studies, founded in 1970. After a wobbling start during which the Society was unofficially reckoned to be the research arm of the Pentecostal World Conference (a loose federation of major global Pentecostal denominations), the Society welcomed membership and scholarly contributions from persons of differing beliefs or none at all. Today the Society's annual meeting still attracts scores, sometimes hundreds, of scholars; and probing inquiries are made surrounding the remarkable growth of the Pentecostal movement--surely a leading religious phenomenon of the twentieth century, one that crosses virtually all denominations and outnumbers by far Protestantism itself. •

The Society for Pentecostal Studies: A Brief History

by D. William Faupel and Kate McGinn

Beginnings

The Society for Pentecostal Studies, founded in 1970, was first envisioned by four men—William Menzies and Russell Spittler of the Assemblies of God, Vinson Synan of the Pentecostal Holiness Church, and Horace Ward of the Church of God. Formed with the intent "to serve the church world by providing an authoritative interpretation of the Pentecostal Movement," the Society directed its energies toward bringing scholarship on the Pentecostal tradition to the fore.

At its founding meeting held in Dallas, Texas, coinciding with the Sixth Pentecostal World Fellowship Conference (WPF), 200 individuals gathered to discuss the state of Pentecostalism. The entire population was either Pentecostal or charismatic. To prevent misunderstanding and to underscore its focus on the study of Pentecostalism, the Society quickly changed its name from the Society of Pentecostal Scholars to the Society for Pentecostal Studies. Full membership was predicated upon subscription to the statement of faith of the Pentecostal Fellowship of North American (PFNA), the regional group of the WPF.

Membership

From the outset, the Society's Annual Meeting provided a dynamic forum for vigorous discussion. But while consensus for the need of academic rigor never wavered, the Society soon discovered its unofficial relationship to the PFNA to be a source of controversy. On the one hand, some members felt the Society should become an official organ of the PFNA and thus "the authoritative interpreter of the movement." Others were uneasy, however, that a growing number of persons attending the annual conference were unable to sign the PFNA Statement of Faith and were thereby denied full membership. African Americans and Hispanic Americans felt they could not sign a statement of an organization (PFNA) that had denied membership to their denominations. Oneness Pentecostals objected to the statement's Trinitarian language. Many Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Orthodox Charismatics could not sign because of the "tongues as initial evidence" clause. In addition, World Pentecostal Fellowship leaders outside North America objected to the Society's purpose statement, which claimed to be the official interpreter for the movement.

These issues were resolved over a four-year period. In 1975 the membership rejected a proposed constitutional amendment to make the Society an official organ of the PFNA. The following year they addressed the WPF's concern by changing their purpose statement to read "to serve the church world by providing a scholarly forum to interpret the Pentecostal movement." In 1979 a constitutional amendment to replace the PFNA statement of faith with the WPF statement of purpose as the basis for full membership was approved. Finally, the Constitution and Bylaws were revised in 1980 to incorporate inclusive language.

The list of past presidents attests to at least some success of the Society's attempt to be inclusive. In its 30-year history, four women, three African Americans, two Hispanics (one a Mexican citizen), three Canadians, two Methodists, a Oneness Pentecostal, a Roman Catholic, and an Episcopalian have served as president, with another Hispanic and another Roman Catholic scheduled to serve in the next two years.

A Scholarly Forum

In 1979 the first issue of Pneuma: The Journal of the Society for Pentecostal Studies was published. Committed to forwarding the cause of Pentecostalism in the academy, the journal was to "contain the fruit of our scholarship in the form of articles given as papers in the Annual Meeting as well as other articles submitted for publication as well as book reviews." Since its inception, the journal has filled a need not met by the more informal newsletter of the Society. A quick survey of the journal's contents illumines not only the natural shifts in the Society, but its maturation as well. In an early issue of volume 1, all four articles depict various aspects of spiritual gifts, especially the gift of prophecy. Members of the Assemblies of God authored all four. In volume 10 (1988), all of the articles were international in scope, and none were written by a classical Pentecostal. A more recent volume, 19 (1997), includes articles on the Anglican–Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada connection, Pentecostal origins, Pentecostal-evangelical relations, and the nature of God. Contributors run the gamut of Christian denominations. Pneuma, like the Annual Meeting, expresses insights from multiple disciplines.

The breadth of the Society is perhaps best seen at its Annual Meeting. Meeting themes have varied effectively from "Jesus Christ and the Gifts of the Spirit" (1982), to "Memory and Hope" (1996); and from the "Distinctiveness of Pentecostal-Charismatic Theology" (1985) to "The Five-Fold Gospel" (1997). In addition to its plenary sessions, which focus on the theme of the conference, several parallel tracks, sponsored by Interest Groups, provide papers in their disciplines: namely, Bible, theology, church history, mission, praxis and Christian education, religion and culture, and philosophy. The Annual Meetings are held at institutions that promote the scholarly study of Pentecostalism. Such diverse campuses as Wheaton, Gordon-Conwell, Fuller Seminary, St. John's College, Wycliffe College, Asbury Seminary, Lee University, and Southern California College (now Vanguard University) have hosted the Meeting. Occasionally the Society sponsors a publication in book form. Russell Spittler's and Vinson Synan's editions of collected essays and William Faupel's and Watson Mill's bibliographic introductions are examples.

Ecumenical

Ecumenism has been a natural by-product of the Society. That scholars outside of the Pentecostal circle wish to partake in the debate and contribute to the growing body of literature on Pentecostalism is proof incontrovertible of the admission of Pentecostalism into the academic firmament. But the Society has also opened the door for other discussions. Creating a forum has enabled Pentecostals to enter into dialogues with the Faith and Order Commission of the National Council of Churches and the Wesleyan Theological Society. Individual members, who apprise the Society of their discussions, are in conversation with the Roman Catholic Church. In fact, the Roman Catholic-Pentecostal Dialogue is only one year younger than the society itself and was instituted by two of its earliest members. The Society further positioned itself as an academic and ecumenical enterprise by aligning itself with the Council for the Study of Religion in the late 1980's.

Unlike strictly academic societies, such as those for church history or biblical studies, and unlike strictly religious societies, the SPS stands, sometimes uncomfortably, with a foot in each camp. Annual Meetings offer a full complement of sessions, be they academic or praxis oriented. Membership, now over 600, comprises every major Christian denomination, and some outside Christianity. Meeting participants are as apt to be graduate students from secular schools as professors from religiously affiliated colleges.●

ORGANIZATIONAL MEETING

Nov. 6 • 9th Pentecostal World Conf., Dallas,

TX • Following the Spirit of Truth

1970

The Society Is Born: With the blessing of Pentecostal World Conference leader Paul (David) Yonggi Cho, Vinson Synan (Emmanuel College), William Menzies (Evangel College), and Horace Ward (Lee College)

invited Conference attendees to a November 6 meeting devoted to organizing a Society for Pentecostal Scholars, under the theme “Following the Spirit of Truth.” One hundred thirty-nine attended, just covering luncheon costs, and Klaude Kendrick, an early Pentecostal Ph.D., spoke about Pentecostal scholarship.

Leaders from Pentecostal bodies worldwide attended, including Thomas Zimmerman and David duPlessis, as well as Roman Catholic Kilian McDonnell. Bishop D. E. Underwood (Pentecostal Holiness Church) chaired the constitutional meeting, and the Society was born by adopting a constitution drafted by Vinson Synan, who drew upon the constitutions of the Wesleyan Theological Society and the Evangelical Theological Society as models. The SPS constitution included the classical Pentecostal statement of faith held by the Pentecostal Fellowship of North America (PFNA). The proposed name “Society of Pentecostal Scholars” was amended to the present name of the Society because some potential charter members objected to the implication that only scholars could participate in a society so named.

Officers: The one hundred eight charter members elected William Menzies as President and Vinson Synan as Executive Secretary and decided to meet concurrent with future annual meetings of the PFNA.
