Cardinal Tobin continues to dispense the faithful from the obligation to attend Mass on Sundays and holy days (as well as "Easter Duty") and encourages those at risk because of underlying health issues or who are 60 or older to avoid the risks posed by attendance at public celebrations of the Mass.

FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

Here are some more suggestions for your summer reading:

Biographies and memoirs:

Bill Buford's Dirt (Knopf) is a memoir by a former editor at the New Yorker who quit to become a cook at restaurants in Italy and then in Lyons, France, the capital of French cuisine, where even the local schools his children attended offered delicious food. "For lunch, the children are served three-course meals, no menu ever repeated during the year, ending with cheese, fruit, dessert or yogurt."

Joe Namath's All the Way: My Life in 4 Quarters (Little, Brown) is an honest account of the Jets' quarterback's famous moments and his victory over an embarrassing drinking problem.

Françoise Frenkel's A Bookshop in Berlin (Atria) is a memoir by a French Jewish woman who ran a bookstore in Germany and then had to flee, first to France and then to Switzerland, during World War II.

Eric K. Washington's Boss of the Grips: The Life of James H. Williams and the Redcaps of Grand Central Terminal (Liveright) relates the life of a man who was at the heart of New York City's African American life from 1900 to 1945. He was socially prominent, hard-working and striving in the face of formidable racially-based disadvantages, which he and his people faced with what Washington calls "persistent fellowship, ingenuity, and grace."

Sasha Chapin's memoir All the Wrong Moves (Doubleday) is centered on chess. Two marital downfalls recounted are about the painter and sculptor Marcel Duchamp, who spent his honeymoon in a chess club in Nice, France, prompting his wife to glue his pieces to his chessboard and then file for divorce, and ex-world champ Boris Spassky, who said of his doomed marriage that he and his wife "were like bishops of opposite color."

Julie Satow's The Plaza: The Secret Life of America's Most Famous Hotel (Twelve) tells many stories, including how the famous tenor Enrico Caruso moved into the Plaza, with its new modern features in each room, including phones and synchronized clocks. He couldn't stand the way the ticking of the clock threw his vocal training off, so he attacked it—and damaged the hotel's entire system, causing guests to sleep late and miss their various appointments.

William E. Wallace's Michelangelo, God's Architect—The Story of His Final Years and Greatest Masterpiece (Princeton University Press) tells how the great artist spent the last 17 years of his life as the architect for the "new" St. Peter's basilica, at the request of Pope Paul III. He was 71, at a time when most men died by age 45—and he served without pay. Wallace writes: "So, are you thinking of retiring? Just because you are in your 70s? Michelangelo was just entering the busiest and most creative years of his life. And look what he accomplished 52 years after completing the Sistine Chapel."

Nicholas A. Basbanes's Cross of Snow (Knopf) is a biography of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the 19th-century poet who enjoyed phenomenal success in his work, but experienced a great tragedy when he lost his beautiful and brilliant wife, Fanny, who died after her hooped dress caught fire. Longfellow said that "I never looked at her without a thrill of pleasure;—she never came into a room where I was without my heart beating quicker, nor went out without feeling that something of the light went with her."

Anne Glenconner's Lady in Waiting: My Extraordinary Life in the Shadow of the Crown (Hachette) recalls her thirty years of service to Britain's Princess Margaret. Among her duties was to turn the hose on a neighboring princess's cats when they wandered into Margaret's yard.

Hisham Matar's A Month in Siena (Random House) recounts how his father was kidnapped in Cairo by agents of Libyan dictator Moammar Gadhafi, and taken to Libya, where "He was imprisoned and gradually, like salt dissolving in water, was made to vanish." His son derived some consolation from a month's stay in Siena, where he savored the city's great works of art. Siena is encircled by walls and has labyrinths of alleys, but it also has its central public square, Il Campo. Matar says that "To cross it is to take part in a centuries-old choreography, one meant to remind all solitary beings that it was neither good nor possible to exist entirely alone."

Andrew R. M. Smith's No Way But to Fight (Texas) is about the life of two-time heavyweight champ George Foreman, who later became a successful TV personality, salesman and evangelical preacher.

Essays and books on current affairs:

Jennie Bristow's Stop Mugging Grandma (Yale) rejects the views of those too ready to criticize Baby Boomers.

She notes that their predecessors were far from perfect, as shown by two World Wars, the hedonism of the Roaring Twenties and racial segregation. "Generationalism," as she calls it, "has come to find its most comfortable home within identity politics, that shrill sentiment of victimization and grievance that has become an increasingly powerful cultural force." Better recent developments, she notes, have been the end of Communism and the development of statin drugs. She is also encouraged by how the recent generation has valued the family: "... most people experience the relations between the generations as something rather more precious and harmonious," which helps our society cope with such problems as aging and economic challenge. Most indicators say that "young people today are generally emotionally close to their parents, often financially dependent on them, and see their families as a source of stability and support in a world where other commitments seem increasingly difficult to make."

Louise Aronson, MD's Elderhood (Bloomsbury) is about the difficult realities of aging, when "We fall ill more often and more gravely. We become frail. The smallest, most ordinary tasks—eating, showering, walking—become time-consuming, difficult, dangerous, or impossible. We fight and flirt with death."

Roger Faligot's Chinese Spies (Hurst) is a French writer's account of Communist China's worrisome government-sponsored machinations.

Deal W. Hudson's How To Keep from Losing Your Mind: Educating Yourself Classically to Resist Cultural Indoctrination (TAN Books) extols the traditional values of beauty, truth and goodness.

Thomas Lynch's The Depositions (Norton) is a collection of essays on life by a Michigan funeral director and talented writer.

Daniel Markovits's The Meritocracy Trap (Penguin Press) describes the competition and pressure of getting into elite universities. Reviewer Joseph Epstein says that in his city of Chicago students in wealthy areas call the taxing prospect of preparing for admission to Harvard "Preparation H."

Bernard-Henri Lévy's The Empire and the Five Kings: America's Abdication and the Fate of the World (Henry Holt) focuses on the murderous actions of Islamic nomads and the threats they pose to Nigerian Christians.

STEWARDSHIP REFLECTION

"For my yoke is easy, and my burden light." MT 11:30

When we think of being good stewards, we may think that God is asking too much of us when He calls us to generously share our time, talent and treasure. However, we must remember that we are not "owners" of anything, we are merely "stewards" of the gifts God has given us. All He is asking is that we give back a small portion, in gratitude, of what He has already given to us.
