ATTENTION SAINT JOSEPH SCHOOL ALUMNI, PARENTS, GRANDPARENTS, FRIENDS

Are you a former student of SJS? Maybe you are a graduate of the class of 1968, 1988, 2008 or any year since 1939! Or perhaps your child attended Saint Joseph School and you count yourself blessed that you were able to provide him or her with such a fine education. Or maybe your grandchildren attend Saint Joseph School now.

You can show your appreciation, record your own or your child’s/grandchild’s moment in SJS history and help future students of our excellent school (all at the same time!) by putting an ad in the "2018 Dancing for Our Stars Commemorative Journal."

Ads must be submitted by March 23. You can email (to gala2018sjs@gmail.com) a pdf file of your finished ad, email or mail a business card, send your typed or neatly printed ad to “305 Elm St, Oradell, NJ 07649 re: Journal Ad,” or have us design your ad using the wording you request. Contact Sonia Labozetta at 201-214-9487 with any questions or stop by Saint Joseph School.
In The Innocents Abroad (1869), Mark Twain’s rollicking account of Americans journeying through Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land, he recalls how they entered Jerusalem’s Church of the Holy Sepulchre, where “one sees on his left a few Turkish guards—for Christians of different sects will not only quarrel, but fight, also, in this sacred place if allowed to do it.” For “it has been conclusively proven that they cannot worship together around the grave of the Saviour of the World in peace.”

Things are usually more orderly there these days, but some skirmishes still occur in the church that is Christianity’s most important place of worship, the convincingly attested place where, under its dome, the locations of Jesus’s death, burial and resurrection are commemorated. Evelyn Waugh, who wrote a beautiful short book about the holy places, called the Church of the Holy Sepulchre “the supreme treasury” and “principal shrine” of the Christian world.

From the Church’s earliest days, its site has been venerated. In the fourth century, separate churches, part of the Emperor Constantine’s vast imperial construction projects, were built across a plaza to mark the places of the crucifixion and the resurrection. Today’s church, which dates from 1099, when the Crusaders recaptured Jerusalem from the Moslems who had despoiled much of the city, is jointly occupied by The Catholic Church and five expressions of the Orthodox Church (the Greeks, Armenians, Coptics, Syrians and Ethiopians).

Evelyn Waugh described a ritual that happens nightly at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Since the time of Suleiman the Magnificent, an Arab Muslim family has been responsible for opening and closing the church. After one of its members locks the church, clergy of the various churches emerge from their posts inside. For a while, all is silence, but after 11:00, Waugh wrote:

... there is a sound of door-knocking, knuckles, wooden hammers, a little electric bell somewhere... [At 11:30] something like a jungle war-drum starts up. That is the Greeks. Then a great irregular banging together of planks. That is the Armenians. Then two muted thurifers appear and proceed by opposite routes round the whole building, censing every altar with a chinking of brass and clouds of aromatic smoke.

Then the night offices of prayer begin.

Waugh also described a wish most Christians fervently have about the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, noting that

Our Lord was born into a fiercely divided civilization and so it has remained. But our hope must always be for unity, and as long as the Church of the Sepulchre remains a single building, however subdivided, it forms a memorial to that essential hope.
