Live Like No One Else

Over the last month, we've been talking about what the Bible has to say about the way we view and handle wealth - how faith and finances integrate in our everyday lives. This Sunday, we conclude this series of worship themes with "Wealth, Wisdom, and the World." One of the things we come to realize is that we've all made mistakes with money. I certainly have. I'm guessing you have, too. So, there's no shame or guilt in that. The question is: what have you and I learned from those experiences that we can take with us moving forward?

My hope is that over the course of this series, you've learned something new, and that, better yet, you will apply what you've been learning to your life. Dave Ramsey often says, "If you will live like no one else, later you can live like no one else." Making changes to your finances starts with changing your perspective, but in the end, it's about altering your behaviors and making different choices.

As a reminder, I will be offering a class this fall that will help you do exactly that:

Dave Ramsey's Financial Peace University (9-week class) will be held here at Trinity UMC on Sunday evenings from 6:30-8:00pm, starting September 17. Anyone from our community or church is welcome to attend. A membership is needed to attend the class (one per household). If you already have a membership, you are welcome to attend the class again.

You can register for the class and purchase the kit online by clicking on this link to our class page:
