TIM TALK

This is the year I will make a difference.

Now is the time.

Today is the day.

I will not make excuses.

I will not wait for someone else to do it.

I WILL make a difference for Jesus.

It is always fun to get to pat you on the back, and I want to do that today. In fact, I want to let you know that, last Sunday, you made a difference!

If you were here Sunday, you know that my family had a visitor with us. The story of his presence is a bit different than what you might think.

Most people assume that David and I have been friends from way back. Otherwise, why would he have come? Truth is, I had never met David before he showed up to drive our earthly possessions from McMinnville, Tennessee to Fresno. I had never even heard his name. He worked for a friend of mine, but we had never spoken. His boss told me to expect that David would help unload the truck once we got here. And those who helped us move in can tell you that David hustled until the load was off the truck. He seemed like a nice enough guy, but when he drove off that day in August, I never really expected to see him again.

You can imagine my surprise then to learn that he was in California delivering and picking up freight and wanted to come by for church with us on Sunday. Ready for an even bigger punch line? David is not a Christian. Further, David does not attend church at all. Never has. Oh, he has visited once or twice...ever. So I was super-excited for him to be here Sunday. And you came through with flying colors! He told his boss that he felt more accepted here than anywhere he has ever been before. He went on to say that "the people were amazing, the friendliest bunch I've ever met." You are not what he expected to find in church, much less in California!

When David left Sunday evening, he said that the next time he has a load for out here he will be back, not just to visit with us but to be with you again. He even asked me to pass along his appreciation to you all for the way you received him. A stranger came into your midst and you were Christ to him. WELL DONE! You made a difference - perhaps an eternal one - in David's life.

Until we meet again...TWP
